flexible solutions for your radio needs

NON LICENCED RADIOS

Once the exclusive use of the military, security & emergency services, business radio is suddenly everywhere - from restaurants to garden centres- it is helping business function efficiently all over the country. The reason for all this activity is a Government initiative to relax control of some of the airwaves and allow a simplified licence free service known as PMR446. Radios for use on this service are less expensive than conventional licenced equipment. The very cheapest are suitable for leisure use whilst the more expensive are ideal for professional business applications. The uses are endless - wherever people need to talk to each other within a radius of about one mile. Walkie talkies can offer great benefits - they are simple, cheap and reliable - and unlike cellphones, once brought there are no further charges.

No licence is required.

LICENCED RADIOS

Business and industry have been benefiting from two way radios since the mid 1970s. It is ideal for companies looking to add value to their on-site communication either in the form of wider area coverage or extra calling features on a secure licenced frequency. (Crystal assist in all aspects of Licence applications). The radios include handportables, mobiles and repeater base stations. All are generally exceptionally rugged, high powered, rich in features and are available in VHF and UHF frequency bands to suit topographical conditions in the area of operation. Obtaining a radio licence is very straightforward, we simply forward you an application form which needs to be completed and sent with payment to Ofcom. For an onsite licence the fee is £75 per year or for a UK General Licence (allowing use around the UK) the fee is £75 for 5 years regardless of how many radios you operate. Licenced radios are typically 10 times more powerful than unlicensed radios giving greater range and less likelihood of interference from other radio users. Should your business already be using licenced radios then we can program radios to work with your existing fleet at no charge.
